sand men into Dresden; day after to-morrow 100,000. more.

25th, Stolpen:

I have just arrived at Stolpen. Vandamme's troops are already nearing Dresden. I want as little show made as possible so that the enemy may not suspect the arrival of these troops, and the operations we are undertaking. The Old Guard will arrive at eleven.

(To Marshal Saint Cyr.) You must hang on. I shall reach you early in the morning.

The reports about the Duke of Reggio are so confused that I can form no opinion as to what they mean. The letter says that on the 21st and 22d we had some minor successes; but it is clear from the official dispatches that only a few shots were fired on the 20th and 21st.

26th, 4 A. Jfcf. ;

Yesterday at midnight the whole of the enemy's army was in sight of Dresden, and Marshal Saint Cyr feared an attack for this morning.

On the Dresden road, 9 A. M. .•

We are just arriving at Dresden, the enemy face the city.

27th, Dresden:

I won a great victory at Dresden yesterday over the Austrian, Russian, and Prussian armies commanded by the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of Russia, and the King of Prussia. Many prisoners, flags, and guns are being brought in.

The enemy are not retreating. If they remain in position, my intention is to turn their left, and the King of Naples will carry out this operation with the 38 battalions of the Duke of Belluno.
